LAMOT

MODERN CONGRESS CENTER

Lamot today: a classy brewery building

The Lamot building is a household word for many Mechelen residents. It used to house a brewery with an international reputation. Now it is one of the most beautiful examples of modern architecture in Mechelen. The building still exudes the atmosphere of the old brewing trade and houses the Mechelen National Heritage Cell. With strong roots in the past, the location now offers a gateway to the national heritage of the present.

National Heritage and Lamot: a flag with rich connotations

National heritage stands for everything that previous generations have left behind: tangible things like monuments and archives, as well as stories and traditions that live on.

Various municipal departments care for our national heritage: the Archaeological department, municipal museums, the City Archive and the Mechelen National Heritage Cell. All these departments have worked intensively to build the heritage story in and around Lamot over the last few years. The added value of a combined conference centre and national heritage centre is that Lamot visitors can become acquainted with Mechelen's heritage in all kinds of ways. The wide selection includes: a unique ascent of the Saint Rumbold's tower, a walk along archaeological sites and lectures on the history of the City of Mechelen.
